The word robot comes from the Czech word robota which means forced labour or slavery. So robots were conceived as slaves of the human race. Since then, the word robot has been used very frequently by the science fiction writers and film makers. During the last few years many films such as Star Wars, Saturn-3, Robocop,

Metropolis, etc. have been made, which are all related to robots.

Robots are being used mainly in factories. They are also being used to perform dangerous jobs and scientific experiments. They are also used at home, in space and in medicine.

Industrial robots can work where human beings can't work due to the heat or the poisonous environment. Industrial robots can lay under-sea cables for telephones and can work in coal mines, oil fields etc. Robots are being used successfully in nuclear power plants for the disposal of radioactive wastes.

Different types of domestic robots are being used in advanced countries like America and Japan for different purposes. Many top robots are available which can produce different sounds and light effects to entertain children.

Robots are used for many medical purposes too. They can help the physically handicapped. The Japanese have developed a robot which acts like a patient and is being used as a guinea-pig for training medical students.
